In 2016, the Learning and Work Institute (LWI) published a report called Power to the People: The Case for Personal Learning Accounts which called for every citizen to have such an account by 2022, allowing five years for implementation and piggybacking on the existing "lifelong learning accounts" run by the National Careers Service.

Are lifelong learner accounts back on the cards?

Today's careers look nothing like they did 20 or even just 10 years ago. Like technology, the field of education evolves so fast that techniques, skills and technologies become obsolete within five to 10 years. That is why being a lifelong learner plays an important role in the educational process.

Lifelong learning - Wikipedia

Examines Britain's 'learning divide', lifelong learning (connecting schooling with other forms) and the shifts in policy and behaviour needed to establish a 'lifelong learning culture'. While there is a nod in the direction of collective experience, the focus is on the development of individualised learning (and in particular ILLAs – individual lifelong learning accounts).

Lifelong learning - infed.org:

The notion of education as a public good provided the basis in many countries for making 'free and compulsory' education available to all; proponents of education for a socially inclusive and democratic society now also claim lifelong learning as a public good (see Riche sin the Grass, Nordic Council of Ministers, 1995) We do not suggest that education, like other 'public goods' such as health ...

Lifelong learning: concepts, theories and values

The evidence of the value of lifelong learning is powerful. Why then, do we do so badly in Britain, and in England in particular? We are, alas, overwhelmingly obsessed with initial education – the clockwork model that starts with early years and ends with labour market entry – at the expense of learning through the life course.
